Until 1950, the nearest barber shop was in Livberze. There a Latvian woman offered haircuts and shaves at her home. When she moved away from Livberze late in 1950, one had to go to Yelgava for a barber's service. There barbers worked market days in booths along the market fence. A haircut cost two rubles; a haircut plus shave, three rubles.

25X1 8. 25X1 The restaurants were run by some State organization, but there were waiters and waitresses as in 25X1 private restaurants. Most people dramk heavily. 40 per cent vodka cost 25 rubles per liter and 56 per cent vodka cost 35 rubles per liter. Kolkhozniki made beer from barley or, more usually, from sugar beets. In a bar or krogs, a man usually ordered a glass of beer and 100 grams of brandy. The beer cost 2.40 rubles and the brandy 2.50 rubles. A bottle of brandy or pusstops, cost 27 rubles. Kirov Kolkhoz

- 9. The kolkhoz when first organized was called Berze, but in the fall of 1950 the kolkhozy of Berze and Zemgali were united under the name of Kirov. It was administered entirely by Latvians, except for one Soviet who married a Latvian woman. To the south, the border of the kolkhoz was the river Berze. It bordered upon Auseikas, including Glaznieki, and followed the road to Degaini and Juksi to the railroad. Altogether there were 2500 hectares. Neighboring kolkhozy were named Daile and Stars, but source does not know their locations. The center of the Kircv kolkhoz was in Saulieši, and the accountant for the kolkhoz lived there. This center had a telephone connection and electricity from the mill in Berzmuiza, produced by a small motor. In Upeslici some houses had electricity and telephones, but had to use oil lamps because no current was being delivered from the Kegums power station. Other houses did not have telephones; not even the remote brigades had been connected to the center by phone. 25X1 most phone calls were to the police, to
 - the forester, to the Party offices in Yelgava and Dobele, and to the Machine Tractor Stations in Yelgava and Dobele. Only a few of the houses and buildings along the Berze River were damaged in the war, but only a few of these had been repaired or rebuilt. Destroyed buildings included the following: Upmali, Imantas (only the stables) Sauliesi (stables and barr the barr having been rebuilt, since Saulies: was the center of the kolkhoz), Celmi, Ciruli (the bridge is intact), Embergi (repaired by former owner). Bergini (stables and barn). The station at Livberze had not been ruined, nor had the center of Berze. The former pagastnams there now had a post office on the second floor, and the selsoviet and militia downstairs. There was, only one Soviet militiaman. Many of the former owners of the farms raid been deported. The most recent deportations were in 1949, when a widow Sulcs from Lici farm was deported, and in 1950, when Varpji was deported.
- The kolkhoz did not have its own doctor. When a member of the kolkhoz froze his big toe in the winter of 1949-50, he was sent to a physician in Berze, who was the doctor for the rayon. This doctor, a Latvian of about 50 years of age, issued to the patient a certificate relieving him from work for the following four weeks. The patient was not allowed to work, but he was not paid for the four weeks, which were not counted as working days in his trudovaya knizhka kcikhoznika. Salary was paid only for days worked, although for certain kinds of work two days credit was given for one day worked. Neither was the injured worker given food or other support during the four-week layoff. His friends helped him with food over this period of time. The appointment with the doctor and the certificate were free of charge, but a patient had to 25X1 pay for his own medicines. Since there was no pharmacy in Berze, all drugs 25X1 25X1 were prepared by the doctor.

There was also a veterinarian in Berze. He was a Soviet, and served not only Kirov kolkhoz, in which he resided, but several other kolkhozy also.
